At a public gathering in the Town Hall, Denilquin, on Monday, Mr. CHANTER, one of the members for the Murray, referring to the Land Bill which has just been read a second time in the Assembly, said "he thought the squatters should go West, and he would then support them; but they should save the frontages for the people. He would oppose the bill line by line until that which was secured, and would go to the length on its third reading to have it struck out rather than have it passed in its present form." At the same meeting Mr. Druce said "he anticipated that the efforts of the Opposition would prevent the bill from becoming law in its present shape, even if they went to the extremest of obstruction." Mr. Druce's remark is hardly a cause for much surprise. We have heard similar things said by party leaders before he floated to the surface of the troubled waters of politics; and we have heard similar remarks since he continued in that position; and probably they will continue to be heard in the future unless by some happy chance a better spirit should be introduced in the the conduct of public affairs. For the moment our concern is rather with Mr. CHANTER and his remarkable "deliverance." Of Mr. CHANTER it may truly be said that he is not one of the most prominent members of the Assembly. He is a young member. We are not sure that he Parliamentary career has extended over more than two sessions, but the point is not of much importance. A session more or less makes little difference, seeing that one thing is clear beyond doubt: he has not succeeded in reaching a position in the House that would entitle him to assume the attitude, or to display the airs, or to use the language of dictation. And yet at this critical juncture, when the legislative business of the colony is grievously in arrears, when enterprise and industry are languishing through the uncertainty attendant upon the unsettledness of the land question, when it is of the last importance that members generally should sink personal and party considerations in the patriotic endeavour to procure as satisfactory a solution of the problem as circumstances will permit, so that confidence may be restored and other questions of urgency may receive the attention they need, what do we hear from this member whose pretensions should be controlled and restrained by moderation and modesty? If the Land Bill should not be altered in accordance with his particular views, he will oppose it line by line, he will go to any length to have it thrown out. In effect, he will not allow it to become law; he will judge it and condemn it. We seem to hear the sentence. We have even a glimpse of the executioner.

Now, what does this mean? The member for the Murray, like every other member, has a right to speak and vote against provisions in the bill of which he disapproves. He has a right to propose amendments and to support them by reasonable speech and by his vote. He has a right to speak and vote against the bill, although the right of speech is one that is abused when it is not exercised or even waived under the influence of reason and moderation. But to oppose the bill line by line, and to go to any length to have it thrown out at the third reading—these are proceedings of a different character. A member who talks in this style is resorting to threats. The member for the Murray is dictating to the Assembly what bill shall become law, and in what form it shall pass. The House consists of 124 members. The second reading of the Land Bill was carried by 66 to 22—a majority of more than two-thirds of the members present, or, with the pairs included, an absolute majority of the whole House. But the member for the Murray goes to Deniliquin and promulgates his decree. Whatever the majority may think or do, unless the bill be made satisfactory to him, he will block it at every opportunity; he will go to any length to have it thrown out. Surely the majority, recognising its master, will collapse at once. But what is to be said of the freedom of action and the liberty of speech, of which we have heard so much? Where are the terrors of "gagging clauses"? Where is the heavy pressure of the "iron hand"? Has the House, since that division on the second reading, passed under a new tyranny, and is it lying at the mercy of Mr. CHANTER? It is well that the truth should be known in good time by all whom it concerns.

It is for the Government to say whether threats of this kind shall be noticed or ignored; but it is more important that the Government and the House as a whole should determine whether attempts to put them into execution shall be allowed to succeed, and how long they shall be endured. This is a matter of far more than party or personal interest. The question whether Parliamentary Government shall be a failure or a success depends upon the disposal of it. If the country is to go to the trouble and expense of electing 124 representatives to make its laws and control the administration of its affairs, and these men, after meeting to deliberate and to act, are to be befuddled by the obstinacy and self-will of half-a-dozen of their number, whose strength lies in ignorance of the conditions of their position, and in insensibility to its higher claims, it is quite time that our system of Government were changed. Every member of the House who rightly values his office and its privileges should be keenly sensitive to the dangers of this, the worst form of interference by which those privileges have ever been threatened. In a deliberative Assembly, conscious of its rights, the dominance of a minority—of a mere group—abusing a large liberty of speech for the purpose of depriving the whole body of its liberty to go to a vote, should be recognised as an intolerable evil, to be rooted out at almost any cost. As we have said before, this is not a party question. Everyone should know by this time that those who may think they will gain by such practices to-day may be the victims of them a month hence. They have found that out in the House of Commons, and strong measures have been taken to crush the mischief thing as a matter of self-defence. The sooner that example is followed here the better, and it should be followed in no faltering way.

Important papers with reference to the proposals which have been made for leasing or purchasing the Government tramways were laid on the table of the Assembly yesterday. It appears from these documents that offers to buy or lease the tramways were made as far back as 1862, and they have been renewed from time to time ever since, not only by syndicates of English and American origin, but by Sydney and Melbourne capitalists. There is a good deal of variety in the proposals. Some of them contemplate merely the purchase or leasing of the tramways as they stand, and the working of them by private owners or public companies instead of by the Government; some propose to substitute the cable for the steam motor system, while others are based upon a combination of both systems. Proposals for applying the electric principle have also been under consideration, and have received a great deal of attention; but the adoption of the system does not seem to be regarded as a probable event.

The Government has made up its mind that it will be a good thing to lease the tramways, and the arrangement which it appears to favour is a combination of the cable and steam systems, that is to say, the application of the cable system to the shorter services, and the employment of steam motors, as at present, for the longer routes. As to the wisdom of leasing the tramways under proper conditions and restrictions, there can be little doubt. Although the lines are paying better now than they did a few years ago, and are expected to pay still better during the present year, it is not at all probable that the State will get as much out of them by working them as a branch of the Railway Department as it will obtain if the lines are handed over to a public company. But public convenience, as well as profitable working, has to be considered, and the incessant complaints that are made about the present system is not furnishing the community with what it requires. Subject to the approval of Parliament the Government is prepared to invite tenders for the right to construct cable tramlines, and for taking from the Government the present rolling-stock on the steam-motor lines, together with the lines now existing. It is further contemplated, according to a brief minute framed by the PREMIER, that the present system be continued until the new lines are open for traffic, so as not to cause public inconvenience. The existing trams to be gradually taken off as the traffic is absorbed by the new system. The following are the new routes of cable-ways as suggested by the PREMIER:—1. From George-street via Park-street, William-street to South Head. 2. Daves Point to Newtown-road junction, thence to Petersham, Leichhardt, Annandale, and to Five Dock; also to Newtown, Enmore, and Marrickville; also to Glebe Point. 3. From Hunter-street along Castlereagh-street to railway, thence to Redfern, Waterloo, and Botany. 4. Foot of King-street, via College-street, Oxford-street, to Randwick, Coogee, and Botany. 5. Balmain, via Harris-street to George-street. 6. Balmain to Field of Mars.

This minute was referred to the COMMISSIONER FOR RAILWAYS, who has furnished an able report upon it. The routes proposed are commended as having been carefully and judiciously selected, and those which supplement the existing routes are in the opinion of the COMMISSIONER, "just those which seem necessary to complete the tramway system and give that full convenience to the travelling public, which is at present lacking owing to there being only one main line, and that through a thoroughfare removed, comparatively speaking, from the business centre of the city." But Mr. GOODCHAP does not think that all these routes could be satisfactorily served by cable trams. He takes to the cable system very reluctantly, in fact, and while he does not say that it is impracticable, he points out that Sydney is singularly ill-adapted for the application of an entire system of cable tramways, owing to the narrowness of the main arteries of traffic and the want of continuity of nearly all the main streets. It is scarcely necessary to discuss this point; nearly everyone will admit the force of the Commissioner's statement. Mr. GOODCHAP submits an alternative proposition, viz., that of retaining the present motor system, and applying the cable system to certain new routes only, say—1. Daves Point, via George-street, to railway station. 2. King-street, via College, Boomerang, William-street, and New South Head-road, to Ocean-street, Woollahra. 3. From alongside Circular Quay, via Pitt and Castlereagh streets, Belmore Park, crossing present tramway to Elizabeth-street, and on to Mount Lachlan Estate, Waterloo. The objection to proposals one and three is that they provide for taking the trams through two narrow streets which are hardly capable of carrying the existing traffic. Mr. GOODCHAP recognises this difficulty so far as George-street is concerned, for he suggests that the line might deviate at Charlotte-place and pass along Church-hill by Petty's Hotel, through York-street as far as the Town Hall, where it might re-enter George-street. But supposing this were done there would be Pitt-street, and it is very doubtful whether, even with the present traffic, cable trams could be run up and down that thoroughfare without blocking the traffic. Even in Melbourne, with its wide streets, the trams, although they do not choke the traffic, are a source of danger; making no noise, they creep up unawares, and bring about an accident before their approach is suspected. If it were not for these objections, the running of cable trams through George and Pitt streets might be approved of, but it is difficult to see how the drawbacks that we have pointed out are to be got over.

Mr. GOODCHAP is perfectly right in his conclusions as to the unsuitability of the cable system for the distant suburbs, or for places of general resort, such as the racetrack, Moore Park, Coogee, and Bondi. In the one case the traffic would not pay for the outlay, and in the other the trams would be unequal to the traffic with which the present system, with a much greater carrying power, is frequently unable to cope. It is useless to reply to the latter objection by citing the case of Melbourne. That city stands in quite a different position. It is provided with an elaborate system of suburban railways in addition to its tram service; it is the same whether you want to go to the racetrack, or to Brighton or St. Kilda, which answer to Coogee and Bondi here—you are carried by train. If the cable trams were depended upon to carry the holiday traffic of Melbourne, or even the whole of the ordinary traffic, there would be a deadlock at once. But while we are unable to see how either Pitt-street or George-street is to be made use of for tramway purposes, we think that Mr. GOODCHAP's suggestion is a good one, and that with some modifications it might be adopted with advantage.

The Government is to be commended for its straightforward conduct in the question of the tramways. It appears to have conducted its negotiations with the gentlemen who came before it with proposals with the simple object of obtaining information upon which recommendations to Parliament might be based. It has committed the country to nothing, and the question is therefore in such a position that it may be discussed without embarrassment on the part either of Ministers or members. The Government will be supported by Parliament, we have no doubt, in keeping in the hands of the State the determination of the route which new lines of tramway shall take, and in retaining also the right to say what tramlines, if any, shall be abandoned. The reservation of these powers is necessary for the protection of the public interests.

The PREMIER's special addresses are usually of interest to the general public, and the one delivered yesterday, though intended for his own people, is no exception to the rule. By reference to the address in another page of this issue, it will be seen that the chief subjects discussed were—the Repeal of the Church Act of William IV., the Revision of the Constitution, the Divorce Extension Bill, the Lambeth Conference, and the Centennial Year.

To Churchmen the first two subjects are of unusual importance. Despite the difficulties that arise regarding matters of ceremonial, the conduct of church services and doctrine, both High and Low Churchmen are slow to entertain anything that might interfere with what is known as "good old customs of the Church." There are few Low Churchmen who would not look with something of horror upon a proposal to revise the Book of Common Prayer, and there are not many High Churchmen who would not observe with suspicion anything that would seem to weaken the bond between the Mother Church and its Colonial branches. It was not surprising then to note how the PREMIER discreetly and warily anticipated criticism, by saying that the present move might shock the spirit of conservatism among churchmen, but as an adaptation of old Church laws to new Church life was intended by the reform, it therefore contained the elements of true Conservatism. The caution was needed, for there will be those who will see, as has always been the case in the remodelling of a superstructure, the breaking up of foundations. There are always those who have such a reverence for tradition and established habit that any hand laid upon them to make them fitter for a new time is to injure the principle from which they sprang.

It will however be seen by most reasoning beings that the proposed repeal of the Church Act has in it one of the best evidences of the vitality of the Church, especially when it is advocated by those who are generally considered most conservative—the bishops. To the people of a democratic country, as we are constantly told this is, a movement such as that proposed ought to be singularly gratifying. The advocates of the reform say in substance, "Here are laws which recognise conditions, only to be found in the mother country. They are therefore unfitted for this young colony." As the PREMIER said, "The Church Act presupposes State aid; it makes no provision for free and open churches; it leaves the qualification of other than pewholders dangerously vague; it hampers the church unnecessarily in dealing with Glebe lands; and, apparently, in the connection has no conception of the need of curates in our large parishes, and it ties us too closely, as to parochial organisation and arrangement. On every side it introduces difficulty, and that difficulty would be far more serious if we did not see from it by very undesirable paths." These "undesirable paths," the Bishop hints, are ways of ignoring the Act, and using equity instead of law in government. To undertake the repeal of the Act is a courageous thing, especially in the Church, for ecclesiastics are not supposed to be frantic for constitutional reform, or to do anything that would disturb the reverence of time. The State has old laws on the Statute Books which are constantly and openly disregarded, yet they are not repealed. They stand a silent menace to those who break them. It is, however, only at extraordinary times that a breach of them causes any surprise, and then only when, for some ulterior purposes, they are hatched up to trouble the unwary. Our legislators have not as much bravery evidently as the PREMIER and his fellow-churchmen. The Synod may not of course be able to obtain the repeal of the Act, but it will make the effort and the precedent will be established. The revision of the Constitution involves the same principle of reform, and that we will not discuss here. If, however, as the CHANCELLOR of the diocese thinks, it will be necessary to ask Parliament to give its consent to the intended reforms, it is to be hoped the request will be granted. Churches as well as other bodies should have freedom in managing their own affairs, and every facility toward that end should be granted them.

The remarks of the PREMIER upon the Divorce Extension Bill invite attention. Dr. BARRY defends himself from the imputation of having used, in connection with petitioning the Home Government, any "backstairs influence," and he contends that what was done by himself and the Synods was open and aboveboard, and on the natural lines of petition and protest that a private individual would be entitled to use. Most people would be willing to acquit the PREMIER of any covert interference in the matter, but there will still be a feeling abroad that on somebody's part undue effort was used to delay action, or reply on the part of the Imperial Administration. Nine months is too long a time to keep under consideration a bill the principles of which could be mastered in as many hours. None would doubt the right of any individual or any body to petition the Crown against giving assent to a law. That lies within the province of citizenship; but the PREMIER must not be surprised if it is thought that an immediate and present influence can do more at times in the aristocratic precincts of the Imperial Cabinet than the far-off request of a hum-drum legislator. None, either, would doubt the sincerity and single-mindedness of Dr. BARRY's opposition to the Divorce Bill, or that of the clergy and laity of his own and other churches who petitioned against the bill; but they have not in turn always given those who are advocates of the bill credit for the same good motives. It is a matter that concerns public morality and the social economy, and men, whether clergy or not, should come to the question, without prejudice and without bitterness. The English Government will, no doubt, have another opportunity of deciding upon the matter.

In speaking, as he did eloquently upon the celebration of the Centenary, the PREMIER referred to the incident of there having been no grace said at the Centennial State Banquet as a token of neglect to give any religious significance to the occasion. To the mind of the PREMIER the omission was a "grave error," and none the less so because it is supposed the omission was made for fear of denominational complications. Dr. BARRY said the difficulty could have been easily met, but he does not tell us how. Undoubtedly this brief religious function should have been performed, but who should have performed it? If that could have been satisfactorily settled, in all likelihood grace would have been said. Under any circumstances, it was not a matter on which there should be any sensitiveness; but such evidently was not the case. The matter, however, has been given too much importance. The omission cannot be taken as the outcome of a general feeling in favour of religious disassociation from public functions, but rather as the action of those having the celebration in charge, who were too fearful to be reasonable, and too zealous for popularity to be firm.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The English mails to March 20, per Orient, will be due in time for delivery to-morrow about 2 p.m.

The Government decided yesterday to appoint the Hon. P. Faneett a member of the Legislative Council. Mr. Faneett has been for 22 years a Judge of the Supreme Court. He was a member of the Legislative Assembly, and for some time filled the office of Solicitor-General. He has now been summoned to the Legislative Council in recognition of his long and valued public services.

A meeting of the Executive Council was held yesterday, under the presidency of his Excellency the Governor, and a number of departmental matters were dealt with. Sir Henry Parkes, who had just returned from his trip to Waga, was present. The appointment of the additional list of magistrates, which had been approved by the Cabinet, had not yet been formally made.

The Legislative Assembly adjourned somewhat earlier than usual last night, as the weather being very oppressive many of the members were anxious to get away. Several matters were discussed, and during the discussion upon a statement of some importance, which will be found elsewhere, was made by the PREMIER; but beyond this the business was not of general public interest.

The PREMIER announced in the Legislative Assembly yesterday afternoon that the question of the establishment of an agricultural college was now engaging the attention of the Government. The Government would be prepared to submit a bill with that object to the House within three weeks or a month—not alone for the establishment of an agricultural college, but for the establishment in different parts of the country of educational farms. With the information that had before him, and with the extreme dissatisfaction he felt at the manner in which agricultural societies were conducted, he could not consent to hand over these farms to such institutions. There was no certainty that they would find the proper persons in these societies to manage the farms. He was inclined to think that the unoccupied buildings erected at a boys' reformatory, between Rockwood and Bankstown, would be suitable premises for a central agricultural college; but the Government would only determine the site after the most mature consideration.

The Legislative Council will meet at half-past 4 o'clock this afternoon. There are on the business paper three questions, two Government orders of the day, two notices of motion, and one general order of the day. The Government orders of the day include the second reading of the Common Law Procedure Bill, No. 2, and the further consideration in committee of the Government Bill, No. 1.

Sir HENRY PARKES returned to Sydney yesterday by the express train from Waga, and resumed his duties as the Colonial Secretary's office. He seemed in excellent spirits, and appears to have greatly enjoyed his trip to the Murrumbidgee.

The Minister for Works returned to Sydney yesterday afternoon from Newcastle. He inspected the wharves both there and at Carrington, where the whole of the coal traffic of the future is to be carried on. Shortly after the board appointed to inquire into the wharfage arrangements at Newcastle had reported upon the subject, the Minister issued instructions that the work should be proceeded with, and a time was specified within which it was to have been done. The time has expired, and the work has not been completed, but Mr. Sutherland appears to think that it will be finished next week. The Minister inspected the coal staiths, which are being removed, and had under consideration a plan for providing for the through traffic of vehicles at the Market Wharf. The plan provides for carts and drays entering at one gate and leaving by the other. A number of other departmental matters engaged Mr. Sutherland's attention.

It is highly probable that the Government, in order that the consideration of the Estimates may be proceeded with in the Legislative Assembly, will ask for an additional sitting day. The PREMIER and one or two of the Ministers are understood to be in favour of having matters of finance taken in hand at once, and this can only be done by asking for an additional evening or morning sitting. It is not unlikely that the PREMIER will invite the House to consent to a sitting either on Monday or Friday afternoon to deal with financial matters only. The Estimates and the legislative proposals of the Government could thus be proceeded with simultaneously. The matter was referred to in the Legislative Assembly yesterday by Mr. OWEN, and the PREMIER announced that he would be prepared in two or three days to inform the House what the Government proposed to do with regard to it.

The Minister for Mines and the Minister for Public Instruction will leave Sydney on Thursday night on a short trip to Tottenham and the northern mining centres. Mr. Inglis goes north in fulfilment of a long-standing promise to open the School of Arts at Quirindi and a new Public school at Tottenham. The miners of Hillgrove, Emmaville, and Bonobonbon have been for some time agitating Mr. Abigail to go north to inquire into some representations that they wish to make regarding certain mining regulations which they have pressed heavily upon the industry. They also wish to put before him the claims of the northern district to a fair share of the distribution of the prospecting vote, and in view of the recent wonderful development of the mineral wealth in the northern districts, Mr. Abigail would do well to go north to see what is the state of affairs.

The Government have determined to remove the Quarantine Station from its present site at North Head, and to do so on many points of view it is desirable that he should accompany Mr. Inglis on the trip. At first it was proposed that the Ministers should visit not only Tottenham, but Casino, Lismore, Ballina, Brunswick and other northern towns, where arrangements had been made for their reception and entertainment, and then that they should proceed to the Queensland capital. It has been found utterly impossible, however, owing to the state of public business and the demands made upon the Ministers, not only as regards their Parliamentary duties, but as regards administrative matters, to make an extended excursion into the country at present. The Ministers expect to be able to return to Sydney about the end of next week.

The Government have determined to remove the Quarantine Station from its present site at North Head, and to do so on many points of view it is desirable that he should accompany Mr. Inglis on the trip. At first it was proposed that the Ministers should visit not only Tottenham, but Casino, Lismore, Ballina, Brunswick and other northern towns, where arrangements had been made for their reception and entertainment, and then that they should proceed to the Queensland capital. It has been found utterly impossible, however, owing to the state of public business and the demands made upon the Ministers, not only as regards their Parliamentary duties, but as regards administrative matters, to make an extended excursion into the country at present. The Ministers expect to be able to return to Sydney about the end of next week.

The Minister for Works visited the suburb of Alexandria yesterday, for the purpose of inspecting the sewerage arrangements in response to representations which have been made to him by the Municipal Council to the effect that the drainage is defective. The branch sewer conveying the drainage and surface water from the Ewerleigh and upper part of the Alexandria district terminates on some open land, which a little time ago was cut up, subdivided, and partially built upon. The residents of the neighbourhood were very anxious that the sewer should be extended and connected with the Shear Creek system, so as to remove the danger to health which at present exists. The subdivision of the property in question is said to have been intended to appoint the room opposite the Quarantine Station as a mooring ground for them. For this reason, even if there were no other, the Quarantine Station is to be removed without delay.

but Mr. Sutherland is convinced that something ought to be done at an early date to abate the nuisance which is believed to be prejudicial to the health of the community.

An important change has been introduced by Mr. Sutherland in connection with the system of opening tenders at the Department of Public Works. It has not yet been given effect to in its entirety, but yesterday the list of tenders received by the tender board, with the names of each tenderer and the prices submitted were exhibited for general information outside the door of the office of the Under-Secretary for Works. It is proposed on Tuesday next to allow the tenderers and representatives of the press to be present at the time of the opening of the tenders. All that is now required to bring this into force is the preparation of a sitting room for the purpose, and the public are to be allowed to be present in the long room on the first floor of the Public Works Office buildings, and it is expected that the arrangements necessary to provide for this being done will be completed very shortly. The following is a list of the tenders received, together with the names of the lowest tenderers and the prices submitted:—Yase Railway, three tenders, Thompson and Bates, £458 15s. 6d.; supply fittings, Custom-house, Sydney, 10 tenders, James March, £272; erection of bridge over Neila Creek-road, Corwa to Burrows, five tenders, A. Biggs, £277 18s.; John Burton, £20, for running yard; erection of gates and fencing, Pipe Head Basin, near Gulford, two tenders, Palmer and Lewis, £24 2s. supply metal, Botany siding or Darling Harbour, seven tenders, George Hill and G. L. Fuller, both 9s. per ton; fencing material, to be delivered between Orange to Dubbo, 11 tenders, T. E. Moore, posts £2 10s. rails £2 7s. 6d.; purchase of old scrap iron and steel, Sc. Railway Department, 10 tenders. The tenders in this case will be referred to the proper officers for report before the department decide which will be accepted. For the supply of 50,000 sleepers, 51 tenders have been received, and forwarded the Railway Department.

At a meeting of the general committee of the Church of England Association, held on Monday evening last, a generous offer was made by a member of the association, that if a sum of £1000 be raised within a week to supplement the Centennial Protestant Fund, he would give £100. This offer was received with acclamation, and a considerable sum was promised in the room.

A summary was laid on the table of the Legislative Assembly yesterday afternoon showing the past operation of the expansive clauses 6, 7, 8, and 9 of the Electoral Act 1880, the names of the electorates which were proclaimed capable of returning an additional member to the Legislative Assembly at the general election, February, 1887, under the same clauses, and the number of electors in DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHOLERA-PILL. Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated publicly in court that Dr. J. Collis Browne was undoubtedly the inventor of Cholera-pills, and the whole of his testimony confirmed the effect that he deliberately uttered, and he retracted to say it had been sworn to—Times, July 13, 1861.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Cholera-pill.—The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. Z. Russell, Esq., the following statement: "It is my belief that the only remedy of any service in cholera was cholera-pill—see Lancet, December 31, 1861."

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Cholera-pill is prescribed by scores of orthodox practitioners. Of course it would not be so successful if people did not believe in its efficacy, and it will find a place in the Medical Times, January 13, 1861.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Cholera-pill is the best and most certain remedy in cholera, sold without consumption, anaemia, rheumatism, &c.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Cholera-pill is a certain cure for cholera, dysentery, diarrhoea, &c.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's Cholera-pill.—Caution: None genuine unless the words "J. Collis Browne's Cholera-pill" are on the wrapper. Beware of cheap imitations. Testimony accepted Government stamp.
